PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The way I figured it, writing the President's Message would be a snap. After all, I've been getting the message all year from members of the Board of Directors—a lot of them.

But I decided to stay on, anyway.

When Frank Kane gave me the word to hurry up on the message, I reasoned the best way to whip this thing was to go back through five years of Scoops and swipe the best of Delaplane, Gale Cook and Nels Cullenward.

This didn't work, either. Those worthy presidents didn't have the problems we had in 1972—not by a long shot.

No, 1972 wasn't exactly like other years. Your board of directors had to face many problems—losses at the bar and in the dining room, increasing costs and wages, dwindling patronage of Gang Dinners, difficulties in obtaining top speakers. And, of course, the big issue—equality for all members of the news media at 555 Post.

As you know, many of these riddles were solved. The board eased the food crisis by closing the dining room on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights. This meant a reduction in personnel and, it follows, a savings in payroll. The general manager declined to take a raise in pay.

The directors also increased the dues. And the membership committee, with the help of recruiting teams, brought in several hundred new members from all over town . . . from many walks of life.

Of course, not too many news people joined up, but, after all, we were trying to decide what kind of a club we wanted.

At any rate, the emergency board actions and the membership drive eased the financial problems—for 1972, at least.

The Board

It has been an interesting year—and how's that for an understatement? I learned a few things.

Like: the Hydro gang is a serious lot. And you don't make jokes unless you're Victor Borge, who told a luncheon crowd of men and women, "Girls, I was just down to the swimming pool—and you're not missing a thing."

Another thing I found out: the Press Club of San Francisco is made up of dedicated people—no matter which side of an issue they're on.

And, as this is written, the scene continues to change at 555 Post—new problems and some of the old—new officers and board members to face them.

If I have one message to leave it is this: Keep a sense of humor. It helps—believe me.

The Cat Story

By Dr. Leo L. Stanley

There was once upon a time a Black Cat named Tombstone. He lived at the Press Club. He did not like to hunt mice. But he slept in front of the Fire Place where he heard all the news but he never told. While he slept he dreamed of "other pussies" and at last came to the conclusion that he ought to find a wife for himself. He crawled over the house tops to Ellis and Taylor streets, where he found in a house of ill repute a very young and pretty female cat. He had a love affair with her and found that he must marry her for offspring were on the way. They returned to the Press Club and took up habitation in the halls and in the bedrooms of the old Club members. Within a few months along came a litter of five kittens. These kits grew but would not become house broken. They messed wherever they went.

The boarders were angry and upset. "Horrible! All of these cats must get out. Send them on a sea trip. Out with the whole Kaboodle."

Complaint was made to Manager George Brown. "Yes" answered George very sympathetically, "I shall call the Humane Society." Soon the Paddy Wagon came and all the cats were loaded into it. Away they all went.

Now at the Press Club there is only one Tom Cat and that is Tombstone "that black bastard Bufano made."

Das Geschichte von der Schwartze Rater.

Es War einmal ein Rater. Dieser Rater heist Tomb Stone. Er wohnte bei dem

Press Club. Er wollte Mauser nicht zu jagen. Aber er schlaft von den Feuer Platz. Er horte alle die Nachtrichten. Aber er sagt nichts. Er. als schlaft, traumte von anderen "pussies" und endlich kam er zu der Entschluss. Das he fur sich seldst eine frau finden muss.

Über die Hausgiebel ging er nach Ellis und Taylor Strasse. Auf ein Hure Häus fand er eine hubsche junge Katze. Mit sie macht er ein Liebeshandel. Und so, bald müssen sie verheiraten. Junge müssen natürlich kommen.

Tomb stone mit seine Braut verkehrten nach den Press Club. Uud sich aufhalten auf die Halle und Bett zimmer von die alten Besitzern von dem Klub haus. Ein paar monaten dar nach kamen funf kleine Kitschen. Sie wuchsen aber waren nicht Hausgebrokeen geworden. Sie geputzt und gescheist woran sie finden. Sie machten ein Schmutz. Schrecklich.

Die alter Mitgliedschafter waren sehr zornig und aufgebracht. "Alle dieser katzen müssen fort gehen. Sie müssen ein seefahrt machen. Heraus mit die ganze got ver dammt en Kaboodle."

Sie baklagten bei Herr Direktor, George Brown, vorstieber von der Verein. "Ja" antworded George, sehr scherfallig. "Ich will die humanistisch Gesell schaft telephonieren." Bald kultschieren der Paddy Wagon. Alle die katzen waren Wagonbeladung en. Weg gängen sie alle.

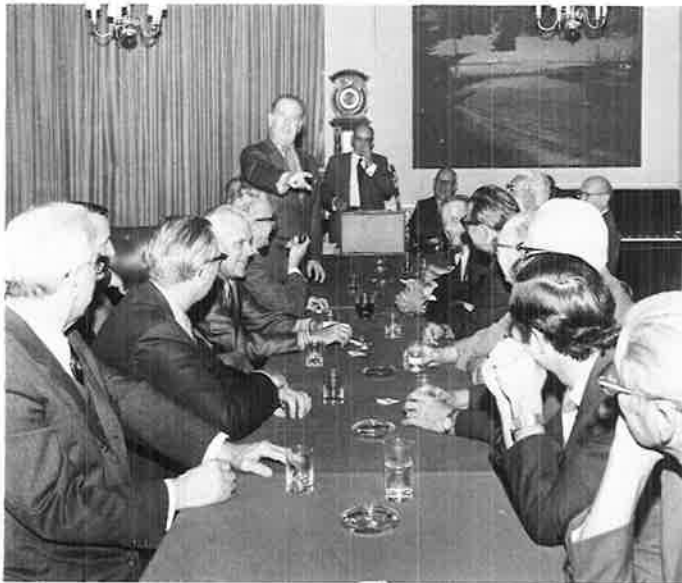

Jetzt bei der Press Club es giebt nur ein Rater, "That Black Bastard Bufano Made."

One of the answers to Universal Peace

By John W. Pettit

Travel offers us one of the most important keys to universal peace as it allows us to see and value how people of other lands live, work and play, to find that they are the same wonderful people as those we know at home.

In my world travels of more than a quarter of a million miles I have found nothing wrong with this universe that love, tolerance and consideration for others could not cure. Keep in mind that every country in this progressive jet age is fast becoming our next door neighbor, and, as good neighbors, we should live peacefully together.

How many of us remember the famous prediction of our former President

Woodrow Wilson with our entry into World War I—"This is the war that will end all wars." How wrong he was, when since then there has been more blood shed than for centuries before.

Recorded history tells us that this world has had less than 300 days of universal peace in the last 4,000 years. So, it is obvious that war is not the answer, but, in my opinion, travel is the interest which is pyramiding each year. It also offers one of the most liberal postgraduate courses to be had.

Those who seldom or never leave their home state are the most severe critics of other nations and people of other lands as they allow false propaganda to influence their thinking.

In our travels of more than a quarter million miles since 1954, we have had only one criticism of U.S. policy. It came from a hotel man at Carlsbad, Czechoslovakia. And had merit, according to his thinking, pertaining to our military aid to West Germany. He feared there might be another Hitler some day in the future, who would overpower his country without cause, sending more than 70,000 to concentration camps, never to return.

Our observations from our travels were that many people of other lands would like to take up residence here, becoming a part of us, for America seems to spell out a Paradise to many. Don't let anyone try to convince you that Americans are not liked in some foreign countries for we are loved by the people of the many, many countries we have visited—and that is almost every country in the universe.

This is the formula I try to follow and offer to all who will create friendship for both our American traveler and for our country is to be praiseworthy of things that are praiseworthy to those in the lands we visit. Do not place ourselves on a pedestal by making comparisons with our standard which, so often, are looked upon as being critical of theirs. This is not the way to make friends as the idea is implanted in their minds that you are trying to belittle them. I found that people of other lands are grateful for the aid the United States has given them.

I say, travel and live longer. Travel is being packaged at many price levels, meeting everyone's pocketbook. No one need stay at home during their vacation period. In short, travel is offering us the fullest return on a perfect life. There is nothing better than creating a full "bank account" of friendship, which can be man's greatest stimulant.

Travel, without question, is the number one key to universal peace. It is fatal to prejudice, bigotry and narrow mindedness. Travel offers a broad, wholesome, charitable view of other people's problems. We learn their desires are not unlike ours. The desire to enjoy the same things our modern scientific age has to offer, living in peace under the influence of our Maker.

Travel offers one of the things that cannot be acquired by vegetating in our little corner of this earth. With our fast means of travel all countries are fast becoming neighbors.

Travel no longer is measured in terms of miles but in terms of time.

In my People to People Goodwill Tours, as official Traveling Goodwill Ambassador, I represent San Francisco, the states of California and Hawaii. Appointments were made by the Governors, the San Francisco Mayor and Board of Supervisors and 18 organizations, including hotel associations, S.F. Press Club, San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. My message has been peace and better understanding in these troubled times to the peoples of the world.

I have received wonderful cooperation from the news media wherever we went, bringing our message to millions and millions of people in many countries.

It is not necessary that we agree. But, it is necessary that we explain ourselves to one another. No individual is a shapeless lump of clay to be molded this way and that by the indiscriminate forces of any autonomous environment.

We come into the world a bundle of unrealized potentials with a capacity for growth. Our concept of the interaction between the individual and his environment is that his capacities must be exercised to the full potential and must be developed in order to be effectively exercised.

Use and growth are the rhythm of all free societies. The prime aim of human contact (people to people), stated tersely, is the development of our human capabilities to the fullest, through personal contacts.

One of the most effective goodwill stimulants I found is to circulate among the grade school children wherever we went. I've had no trouble in getting permission. As a matter of fact, I have been welcomed to visit the classrooms, meeting the children personally. They love to shake hands and have their pictures taken. And we always brought along boxes of hard candy. The teachers or the principal generally set the stage for our visits. Classes have been adjourned for a short period to receive us. Programs of entertainment have been provided for us. The children carry home our message of goodwill from America.

To summarize: When you are in another country, do not make critical remarks about that country, its policies and its people.

Be friendly and gracious. The people you see will respond accordingly.

Talk to many children. You'll find them friendly in every country. They will respond beautifully to your friendliness. And they will carry that message home to their parents and families.

When you make a good impression of friendliness in any foreign country that word and feeling will spread a thousand-fold. Those people, too, will feel as you do.

World peace is attainable. Now! All the people, in all the world, want peace. And it is theirs—for the asking—if they make their wishes known in sufficient numbers to their government leaders.

Our most important space project is the voyage to Serendip.

In the eighteenth century, Horace Walpole wrote about three princes of Serendip who traveled in search of treasure.

The princes never found treasure. But they continually came across other discoveries that proved to be even more valuable.

To describe this phenomenon—that of making unexpected discoveries while in search of something else—Walpole coined the word “serendipity.”

A useful word.

Today, serendipity is perhaps the most persuasive reason why our nation must continue with a strong, balanced program of space exploration.

Our investment in space has already paid us many direct benefits. Instant world-wide communication. Improved weather forecasting. New and vital means of national defense.

But even more important are the serendipitous applications now emerging from the technological and scientific advances made by our space program.

The techniques, products, and processes we've developed are helping us solve problems in air and water pollution. They're helping us increase the world food supply, control traffic, renew our cities, care for our sick. And the list is constantly growing.

At UTC, where we specialize in rocket propellants and advanced propulsion systems, we are proud of the part we've played in America's space program. And all of us are looking forward to the expected and the serendipitous discoveries to be made in tomorrow's journeys.

To us, in the twentieth century, every voyage into space is a voyage to Serendip.

The Politics of Wine

By Fred Cherry

The art of the politician is the art of the promise, the exactly-right promise!

A pot with a chicken in it got a man elected President of the United States. Would he have won this high office with a promise of shad roe—or hominy grits? I doubt it.

The appropriate political promise had a lot to do with the discovery of wine. Luck played a part, as it always does, but the benevolent beverage came into use and favor because of the shrewd maneuver of a jilted woman playing politics in a harem.

King Gemsheed of Persia was inordinately fond of grapes. He stored them in large clay jars so that he would have a supply to eat throughout the year. On one occasion, however, he found the grapes had soured and smelled bad. They had begun to ferment, but the king had never seen this happen before—so he marked the jar “Poison” and set it in a small room until it could be destroyed.

Like all virile Persians of the time, the King had a harem of once-beautiful and of still-beautiful women. These ladies jockeyed for favor in manners so clever, so devious that even John Connolly would have taken notes.

One beauty, fading ever so slightly after a year as the King’s favorite concubine, found herself out of favor. She despaired of regaining her monarch’s attentions, and fell into a deep depression.

She wandered aimlessly around the palace; and one day found the jar marked “Poison.” She decided that she would end it all. Draft after copious draft of the liquid she swallowed—until she fell into a drunken sleep. She awoke, after many long hours, so refreshed and relaxed that she immediately returned for more “poison.”

The lady may have lost some of her beauty, but not her brains. She got word to the King that she had discovered a powerful elixir capable of restoring energy and rejuvenating the spirit. The potentate snapped at the bait; and, when he found it was indeed all his ex-bedmate had promised, he became a wine companion and the lady his favorite drinking companion.

Wine got the lady what she wanted. Would beer or whiskey have worked as well? Not according to Konrad Adenauer, a pretty good politician in his own right.

After the second World War, “Der Alte”—the Old One, as his people liked to call him—was put at the head of a defeated and divided nation; and his task was not an easy one.

One evening soon after he took office, he was sitting with a group of close friends. Philosophically, Adenauer started to muse about the Fatherland during his lifetime.

"When I was a young man," he said thoughtfully, "Germany put its affairs in the hands of Prussians. They drank 'schnapps'—hard liquor—and their performance could hardly be called brilliant. It led to the first World War and abject defeat.

"During my middle years, our nation turned to Bavaria for political leadership—a land of beer drinkers! Under Hitler there was another great war, far more disastrous than the first.

"Now, in my old age, our nation calls upon us—men of the Rhineland, weaned and raised on wine. I know we shall do better; we can hardly do worse!"

Here in San Francisco, in the fall of 1972, we know that many men and some women of more or less good will are campaigning for office; vast networks of multiple media capable of instant communication won't let us forget the fact.

And so, in the fall of 1972, I seek refuge in the chronicles of earlier days when men were elected without outdoor billboards and spot schedules, newspaper spreads and nationwide television. The candidates of the past spread their promises with the help of a more interesting, more appealing advertising medium—which, if only for sentimental reasons, I would like to see Nixon and McGovern (Edit. note—or whoever is Democratic candidate) employ.

Wine glasses, flagons, tankards, mugs, decanters—these were the media which carried the message to the multitudes in days of yore.

And the promises which appeared on this glassware would never be called "empty" promises—not today, at least. These ornate pieces are now collectors' items—with a value far exceeding the wildest expectations of those other-day constituents.

I am firmly convinced that the wine glass is the ideal political advertising medium—intrinsically, and for its fringe benefits. With a wineglass you can drink a toast to your opponent; and the words, engraved on the glass, can be given to the populace.

Toasts in this day are usually friendly; but in earlier times, the words you said as you lifted your glass could be anything but benevolent. In 1790, for example, Captain William Watson of the Revolutionary Army raised a flint glass goblet of Madeira in a toast against the enemies of his country:

"May they have cobweb breeches, a porcupine saddle, a hard-trotting horse, and an eternal journey."

"Never again, Clyde!"

By Lee Ruttle

Forty years ago I made a sacred vow never to touch a political campaign again. That was when my efforts to promote one Lechmere Lovewell as Student Body President at Wasnotte College ended in disaster. My friends insisted he was a loser. He looked it, too: pop-eyes magnified by thick glasses, a voice like Boris Karloff yelling down the vent-pipe of a family tomb, and a face covered with pimples.

But Time (forty years to the day) heals all wounds. Besides, this babe who undulated into my PR office was persuasive. She also had other qualifications which caused my aging gonads to erupt in a frenzy of anticipation.

"I've decided to run for Congress," she purred, "and I want you to manage my campaign."

"What, may I ask, are your qualifications—other than your—ah, more obvious charms?"

"Oh, I majored in Pol Sci at State, and I'm a very concerned citizen, I assure you. My platform is—"

"Never mind the platform now," I said. "Do you have money? It costs a lot to mount—er, run a political campaign."

"My late grandmother left me plenty. It was her dying wish that I persue a political career. When can you start?"

I started.

Within a few days I set up a storefront headquarters, had Ma Bell install a battery of phones, recruited volunteers, ordered posters, car cards, billboards and other ammunition with which a well-heeled candidate litters up the environment. I hired an expert photographer and had him shoot her cavorting in a bikini, attending church in matronly garb, eating Chinese food with chopsticks, soul food, knishes, snails, shishkebab and barbecued Yak—in case there were some voters from Outer Mongolia. She gained twenty pounds in a week. So I sent her jogging through Golden Gate Park, breathless photographer following, and a few intimate scenes in a sauna bath. The pounds rolled off and I had her appointed Honorary President of Weight Watchers.

Meanwhile I ground out copy, snappy captions, feature stories and column plugs for all the media. Day and night she was interviewed on TV and radio. Then I had the volunteers do a telephone poll. My efforts were paying off. Overnight she had become The Great Emancipator (minus the beard) with the face of an angel and a body to match. She didn't have to kiss babies. The babies all fought to kiss her.

The Day of Reckoning rapidly approached. Everything pointed to a shoo-in. I was even tempted to throw a pre-election victory party. While all this way going on, her most formidable opponent, the incumbent—and a handsome bachelor to boot, calmly went about his business of conducting a low-key campaign. The guy must be nuts, I thought, how did he ever dream he could beat this cupcake with all her money, looks and charisma? When the hell is he going to concede?

Two nights before Election I took her to dinner at a quiet little place in Sausalito. No photographers. This was our final conference before the Coronation. I told her to take the next day off, just relax on her balcony overlooking the Bay, and take the phone off the hook. She looked a bit tired from the grueling pace I had set, yet her true radiance and natural beauty was still devastating. I also told her to take it easy on Election Day, but be sure to vote in her local precinct, and show up at the Victory Party about midnight.

I did a little relaxing myself—at least up until the time the polls closed. Then I joined the anxious throng at City Hall to watch the posting of results. But I only stayed a few minutes. I knew my gal would win! I went to the hotel where we had set up the Victory brawl. Had to check the bar to make sure they were dispensing only the best. The champagne was chilling nicely. Hardly anyone thought to phone City Hall for results; we were all confident. Tension mounted, mainly in anticipation of the excitement which would explode when it was over.

Sooner than I expected, ten o'clock on the dot, in waltzed my precious candidate. A tremendous roar shook the room. Champagne corks popped. People popped. I popped.

In rapid succession I did two double-takes. I couldn't believe my eyes. But there she was, as gorgeous as any Atlantic City Winner—but ON THE ARM OF HER OPPONENT!

She gestured for silence. When the crowd quieted, she spoke.

"My dear, sweet friends, my faithful constituents, I have an important announcement to make. I am conceding the election in favor of my husband! Kevin and I were married in Reno yesterday. It just wouldn't do to beat my own husband in a little old election. Now would it, Kevin, darling? Good night, all of you beautiful people, and thanks a million for your loyal support—"

I didn't want to hear the rest. The crowd moaned. I went to the bar. There was plenty of whiskey left.

Days later I recovered and made another sacred vow. I just never will understand politics—or women.

PFEL means Progress

Ever notice how, over the years, a company flag becomes a symbol to people? Take ours, for instance. It's come to symbolize the highest standards of shipping service, efficiency and dependability. It stands for something more, too: Progress.

We are proud that our flag is now flying from the masts of our revolutionary new LASH cargo ships and our recently acquired luxury liners SS Mariposa and SS Monterey.

Look for the PFEL flag. It's a sign of our company's dedication to ever improving our services to both shippers and passengers.

The Gin Rummy Blues

By Ralph A. Freeman

If in a chair of soft repose
I could rest at perfect ease
If I could only teach myself
    Myself to please
If I could trick me with a ploy
To say sincerely—I enjoy
I would (O tale of woe) play
    Gin Rummy

The picture cards they come along
Sometimes a pair sometimes alone
    But never a one do I see
That matches the ones in front of me

So one by one my Rembrandts go
And the seeds of disaster are sown
For across from me there sits a guy
With an Art Gallery of his own

Across the sheet
The schneiders creep
Around the bend go more
By sixes and by sevens
Up goes the gruesome score

Draw a card and know damn well
It never ever fits
Discard a card and sure as hell
It's picked up for a blitz

You firmly grip the arms of your chair
Take a last mad look at that awful score
Then rise in wrath and loudly swear
To forsake Gin Rummy forevermore

L'envoi
Open up the louvres—Away with this sodden air
Close those louvres—The draft's too much to bear
So full of woe and drenched in gloom
You sadly leave the gin rummy room
Knowing full well that the very next day
In spite of the air you'll be back to play
    GIN RUMMY

These are the finals. Dr. Herb Schneider is all smiles and cool in his shirtsleeves while Emanuel November frowns away on the right, as the kibitzers gather in the background.

Governor Reagan gets a few pointers on how to run the State from Past President Ed Montgomery. Harvey Wing gives a listen and does look a bit skeptical.

From the relaxed looks on their faces you can tell they are not discussing a page for SCOOP. Ron Wagoner on left with many time Editor Jack Lamb, taking a rest this year.

"I dreamt I conducted the San Francisco Symphony", Paul Finch said, but it only brought smiles to Ken Dunham and Rene Cazenave and Camey Campion in the background.

"Don't sound to me like Neptune calling his mermaids. Sounds more like he's flushing the toilet."

Time Works for the San Francisco Examiner

Time moves from east to west. Therefore, because San Francisco is located on the Western Coast of the continent, it has a three hour time break on New York and Washington. It has a break of eight and nine hours on most European cities. For example, when stock markets close on the East Coast, it is early afternoon in San Francisco. When big decisions are made in the nation's capital and officials are homeward bound, Examiner editors have ample time for packaging the full story for the final edition. Thus, each weekday throughout the year you can be sure the San Francisco Examiner will publish later news than 100 per cent of the Nation's morning newspapers. It will also publish later news than all evening newspapers in earlier time zones.
